St. Mary's County Health Department Environmental Health Services sanitarians learned late Tuesday that recall products have been distributed in St. Mary's County, however, to date, none have been discovered for sale on store shelves. The health department will continue to monitor food services facilities and retailers to ensure the recall information has been fully disseminated. Consumers should remain vigilant in following USDA Website updates.

Informing Employees and Consumers of Recall

Food service facilities and retailers should inform employees of the hazard associated with the recalled products. In the event that recalled product is identified, signs should be posted on removed recalled products to inform employees on all shifts that the product is hazardous and being held for disposal. Store employees should alert consumers to the recall and the serious health hazard associated with exposure to botulism contamination. The health department recommends posting signs on shelves and elsewhere in the store, as well as other means of shopper notification to warn consumers not to open, taste or eat the recalled products. Placards in English and Spanish are available at
